“ *Brenda was my "suite mate" at Mars Hill College in 1957-58. Many fun memories we have shared through the years. Even though I have lived across the United States for many years we have kept in contact with each other, particularly in recent years. One memory stands out. She and I used to harmonize the old song "Now is the hour when we must say good-bye". It is appropriate once again. May you rest in peace sweet Brenda!
Much love, Beverly Rogers McMahill.*

“ I have wonderful memories of our days at Mars Hill College in 1957-59. Brenda was the life of our parties in the dorm--always dodging the housemother and staying up past lights out. We especially enjoyed listening to our favorite singer of the day--Nat King Cole, popping corn in her popper and roasting marshmallows over the hot plate. We were always afraid the housemother would catch us with our antics! We played a terrible joke on Brenda during exam week--setting her clock up several hours after she was asleep--she got up when the alarm went off, took a shower and got ready for class and started to go to the cafeteria for breakfast only to find it dark and all quiet! She was such a good sport about our joke----I still feel guilty for robbing her of her much needed sleep during exams.

Over the last few years Brenda and I communicated often by phone. I was always concerned about her poor health and wondered how she endured all her pain. Her family and kitty cats were the important things in her life. Wendy & Wesley, she loved you both very much and was very proud of the adults you are today. Although she would get discouraged with her pain and loneliness she somehow found the strength to move on.

I will miss our phone visits but I am happy that she is pain free and at peace. And what a joyous reunion she is having with Millie!

Please know that my thoughts & prayers are there with you today.

Love,
Martha Rust
